Grant County ride-share dispute leads to fentanyl arrest

STAFF REPORT

A dispute with a Lyft driver led to the arrest of a Fort Wayne man on the evening of Tuesday, July 19 in Grant County.

Zavion Davis, 20, of Fort Wayne, was arrested and later incarcerated in the Grant County jail.

Davis will face criminal charges for allegedly dealing in a narcotic drug with enhancing circumstances, possession of marijuana, possession of a handgun by a dangerous person, possession of a legend drug and resisting law enforcement, according to a press release.

Officers responded to North Grant County Road 500 East, because a Lyft driver activated a panic alarm. When the officers located the Lyft driver, he told them he had a dispute with a passenger, later identified as Davis. The driver told Davis to get out of his car, which he did, and the driver no longer needed police.

Monkeypox cases spreading slowly, but steadily through state

A total of 45 probable cases have been confirmed in Indiana, 4,907 in the nation

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

Just over a month after the first occurrence of monkeypox was identified in the state, the Indiana State Department of Health (ISDH) reported this week that several dozen Hoosiers had been infected.

On Friday, July 29, the ISDH announced a total of 45 monkeypox cases were reported across the state between June 18 and July 28, including two pediatric cases.

"No additional information about the cases will be released at this time due to patient privacy," stated the ISDH.

Nationwide, 4,907 cases had been reported by the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) as of Thursday, July 28.

To date, Indiana has received 3,232 doses of Jynneos vaccine, stated the ISDH.

"Due to limited vaccine supply, vaccines are initially being prioritized for close contacts of positive cases to prevent severe disease," stated the ISDH.

Additional vaccine doses are expected soon, and eligibility will be expanded to groups at high risk for exposure as supplies increase, stated the ISDH.

"Like many other states, Indiana has seen an increase in monkeypox cases over the past month," said State

Don't demand from people what only God can do

Rev. Todd Render
Sermonette

The king was losing sleep. There was something deep and dark brewing, but as unsettling as it was, he didn't know what it meant: "I had a dream, and my spirit is anxious." (Daniel 2:3 NAS). Have you been in that place, unable to sleep because you are so upset? More often for me, it is because I've gotten so angry at someone, but there have been other times where I was fearful and insecure and, like the king, anxious in my very soul.

Nebuchadnezzar was king of the most powerful nation in the world, and he surrounded himself with the best and brightest of every nation that he conquered. So important was he and so fascinating the epoch in which he lived that the first four chapters of the book of Daniel center around Nebuchadnezzar and his court – or more accurately, they center around what God was doing in and through the people at that moment in history.

Daniel writes in chapter two that Nebuchadnezzar summoned "the magicians, enchanters, sorcerers and astrologers" (Daniel 2:2 NIV) to tell him not only what the dream meant, but he demanded they tell him what he had dreamed, to begin with. Now that is a tall order. Those titles described the paid professionals in that superstitious society who sought to understand how natural events and appearances explained the supernatural and so would predict the future. They would even entreat the spirit world and cast spells to try and make things go their way. Being able to predict the location of stars and planets is one thing, but betting on the future of your kingdom and your life? Nebuchadnezzar was testing how far their knowledge went: "This is what I have firmly decided: If you do not tell me what my dream was and interpret it, I will have you cut into pieces and your houses turned into piles of rubble." (Daniel 2:5 NIV)

People have troubles, sometimes dire and desperate – and we need something only God can do. We want to know why we are suffering. We are desperate not to be anxious. We want safety and security against enemies, and we want these things not only for ourselves but for our families. We want to understand the present darkness – in the world and encroaching on our souls – and what it means for our future. Often these things are beyond the paid professionals. We seek second or third opinions, expecting politicians and physicians to make things better whether it's the climate or cancer or my anxiety and depression. (Don't get me wrong, I am thankful for all the folks who, through training and experience, may give us counsel and offer some relief – but they are limited as humans, the same as you and me.)

Facing the real and imminent threat of death, Daniel did what became his lifelong habit: he sought God in prayer and enlisted his friends to do the same: "Then Daniel returned to his house and explained the matter to his friends Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah. He urged them to plead for mercy from the God of heaven concerning this mystery so that he and his friends might not be executed with the rest of the wise men of Babylon." (Daniel 2:17-18 NIV) A gracious God gave Daniel not just wisdom and understanding, but specific knowledge to demonstrate to the king not only that God knows what goes on in every human heart, but that He is directing the course of events regardless of our superstitious beliefs and practices. Daniel explained to Nebuchadnezzar: "No wise man, enchanter, magician or diviner can explain to the king the mystery he has asked about, but there is a God in heaven who reveals mysteries. He has shown King Nebuchadnezzar what will happen in days to come. … As for me, this mystery has been revealed to me, not because I have greater wisdom than anyone else alive, but so that Your Majesty may know the interpretation and that you may understand what went through your mind." (Daniel 2:27-28, 30 NIV)

There are so many important takeaways for us here. Stop demanding from people what only God can know. Stop demanding from people what only God can do. God promises across all of recorded history to commune and communicates with the one who seeks Him with all their heart (Jeremiah 28:13). Jesus put an exclamation point on this in confronting the religious leaders who said it was blasphemy to claim you could hear from God. Jesus told them: "Whoever belongs to God hears what God says. The reason you do not hear is that you do not belong to God." (John 8:47 NIV)

What is keeping you up at night? Whether it is the state of our union, the state of your family or the state of your soul, seek the Lord while He may be found. Turn your heart and life over to Jesus and start enlisting your closest friends to petition a gracious God to do what only He can, because a loving, heavenly Father promises to respond. "If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, and I will forgive their sin and will heal their land." (2 Chronicles 7:14 NIV)

a backstage look at the set for WACT's upcoming fall musical, "Guys and Dolls."

The event will take place from 6 to 7 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 7 at 1620-1640 S. Wabash St.

In February 2021, after a brief opening fundraiser to secure donations to purchase the former flea market building, WACT closed on the 0.63-acre plot of land, one that includes two structures that currently house its administrative offices, a set-building area, costume shoppe and storage for props, set pieces, paint and more.

Seaman said the South Wabash Street property is located near Nancy J's Fabrics, B-K Root Beer and Kitchens Plus, just south of Shady Lane Drive.

The larger structure features nearly 10,000 square feet of space in five distinct spaces. A separate 1,260-square-foot pole frame building is also situated on the property, which also features a large parking lot.

"When we were first looking into the property in late 2020, we were coming off of several other properties that year that we didn't acquire for one reason or another. We were really frustrated," said WACT board president Bev Vanderpool. "At that time, the main building was filled with piles of random items. Thankfully, the previous owner was nice enough to sell or dispose of nearly all of it, saving us a lot of work."

Seaman said over the past 18 months, a collection of WACT Board members and friends of the organization have invested thousands of dollars and hundreds of man hours into cleaning, restoring and transforming the new home.

"We're looking forward to showing people how much love and care we've put into this property," said Seaman. "From the basics like mowing to creating a 16,000-square-foot, insulated costume shoppe from scratch, we're wanting to not only share our success with the community but invite them to be a part of it."

Seaman said in the beginning that the WACT board determined that it would need $200,000 to not only purchase the property through a local institutional loan, but to also secure funds for current and future upgrades including an HVAC system, a new parking lot and office equipment.

Seaman said there is an anonymous donor who will be willing to finish off the building's mortgage once there's only $25,000 left to raise.

"What an incredible gift," said WACT board treasurer Howard Kaler. "However, we must finish off the fundraiser before the end of 2023. Nearly $95,000 has either been donated or pledged to the fundraiser, so we're nearing the finish line right now with that final $25,000 gift. We're so close."

Seaman said after more than 20 years, WACT will once again produce "one of the most celebrated musicals of all time" for its 2022 fall musical – "Guys and Dolls," which has been scheduled for Sept. 23, 24 and 25 at the Honeywell Center's Ford Theater.

WACT annually produces at least three or four shows in Wabash, including a fall musical, a straight-play spring comedy and Christmas programming, as well as variety programming and "dinnertainment" opportunities.

Seaman said those who would like to support the facility project can do so by sending a check to Wabash Area Community Theater at P.O. Box 840, Wabash, IN 46992, with "Building" in the memo line. For those who would like to give online, a GoFundMe page titled "WACT Building Fundraiser" has also been created for the project. It can be found on the Wabash Area Community Theater Facebook page or by searching www.gofundme.com.

Those who are interested in making a gift, but would like more information, may contact Vanderpool by email at vanderpob@yahoo.com or call 765-661-8206; or contact Board Member Beth Miller by email at beth@wabashmillers.com or by calling 260-568-1128.

PIZZA KING

"Kim has been tremendously supportive through the entire purchasing process," said Waldon. "Pizza King holds a special place in the heart of my family. My dad co-owned it with his friend for several years and we are honored to have the business back in our family."

Waldon said Pizza King first opened in Wabash in 1971 and closed in 1975.

"The business saw a rebirth in 1985 when it was reopened by close friends Dave McVicker and the late John Schuler. The business changed hands a few more times before (Kim) Osborne was hired in 2000.

Kim Osborne managed the business for eight years before buying the business in 2008.

In August 2019, Wabash Marketplace distributed a facade grant to Wabash Pizza King for exterior repairs to masonry. Pizza King is one of 22 downtown buildings that have received matching grant funds since 2015 for exterior restorations through Phase 2 of the Facade Improvement Program managed by Wabash Marketplace.

"I have poured my heart and soul into Wabash Pizza King and cannot thank my customers enough for the support they have shown me for the last 14 years," said Kim Osborne. "My children worked and helped manage Pizza King throughout the years, too. It wouldn't have been as successful without them by my side, but it is time to hand over the keys. I have zero doubt that Joe and Abby will have any trouble continuing the Wabash tradition that Pizza King is for so many."

During the Plain Dealer's 2021 Best of Wabash County contest, Pizza King was honored by readers in four separate categories including first place for Best Casual Restaurant, third place for Best Family Restaurant, third place for Best Fine Dining and first place for Best Pizza.

Waldon said they do not have plans to make significant changes to the menu or the hours of operation.

"One of the easiest things about buying this business is that it is already successful and established," said Schuler. "Kim is an ace when it comes to running Pizza King. We want to learn from her as much as possible."

Waldon said although the location and facade of the business have changed over the years, the 'Ring the King' slogan has stayed the same.

"Joe and I believe in this community and the Pizza King brand," said Waldon. "We think our dad would be proud of us if he were still alive and we are excited to continue serving Wabash and surrounding areas with the same level of excellence everyone has experienced at Pizza King."

Obituaries

Peggy Jean Rhoads

Dec. 12, 1933 – July 28, 2022

Peggy Jean Rhoads, 88 of Wabash, Indiana died at 12:17 am at her home surrounded by her family. She is survived by her husband of 72 years, George Rhoads, and three of her four children, Colleen (Dave) Coble of Wabash, Rick (Joen Lawrence) Rhoads of Wickenburg, Arizona, and David (Jennifer) Rhoads of Phoenix, Arizona. She was preceded in death by her parents, Everett and Eileen Everroad, and her son, Randy Rhoads.

Peggy was born on Dec. 12, 1933 in Wabash, Indiana to Everett and Eileen (Campbell) Everroad and had three younger siblings, Joan (Frank) Reed and Edith Phillips, both of Wabash, and Ron Everroad of North Manchester. She and George married on Dec. 16, 1950 in Wabash. They met at church in 1948 and married two years later. They started married life in Wabash before moving to Marion and eventually to a farm in southern Wabash County where the kids grew up surrounded by pets, horses and farm animals. Peg loved her life of caring for her husband, children and grandchildren.

Her 9 grandchildren Dave (Donna) Coble of Fort Wayne, Indiana, Amie (Brian) Murphy of Wabash, Kara (Mark) Davy of Goodyear, Arizona, Stacie Parrett of Wabash, Joshua (Abby) Rhoads of Indianapolis, Indiana, Jolleen (Michael) Schemenaur of Wabash, Jacob (Brittany) Rhoads of Peoria, Arizona, Adam (Hannah) Rhoads of Evans, Georgia, and Brandy (Trenton) Gambrell of Roann, Indiana and 26 great grandchildren remember her for her warm hugs, welcoming home, her homemade noodles and fudge. There were always delicious smells coming from the kitchen, and Gram was happy to let the grandkids put pink curlers in her hair, polish her nails, and play with her hair. Her favorite occupation was rocking babies and enjoying loud, chaotic family gatherings.

Funeral services will be 11:00 am, Saturday, July 30, 2022, at Grandstaff-Hentgen Funeral Service, 1241 Manchester Avenue, Wabash, with Chaplain Captain Adam Rhoads officiating. Burial will be in Friends Cemetery, Wabash. Friends may call 9:30-11:00 am Saturday, at the funeral home.

ARREST

Trooper Edward Titus located Davis on the roadside at Indiana 18 near Grant County 500 East. As Titus spoke with Davis, Titus said he noticed the odor of marijuana emitting from him.

During further investigation, Titus was securing Davis in handcuffs when Davis allegedly pulled away. Titus quickly regained control and handcuffed Davis. During a search Titus reportedly found marijuana.

Titus said he also located 12 ounces of fentanyl pills, a loaded handgun, seven bottles of promethazine and $11,866 on him. Due to Davis having a pending felony case for resisting law enforcement, he is prohibited from possessing a handgun.

Titus was assisted with this investigation by officers from the Grant County Sheriff's Office, Trooper Andrew Baldwin and Trooper James Wilkison.

Law enforcement officers encourage anyone with information about the possession, distribution or manufacturing of illegal narcotics to call their local law enforcement agency or the Indiana State Police Drug Tip Line at 800-453-4756. Information can be reported anonymously.

MONKEYPOX

Health Commissioner Kris Box, M.D., FACOG. "Monkeypox does not easily spread through brief casual contact, but it is important to remember that anyone can be affected if they are a close contact with a positive case. Hoosiers who believe they may have been exposed or who develop symptoms consistent with monkeypox are urged to contact a healthcare provider."

The 45 cases is a notable increase from just a month ago. In response to a June 30 request from the Plain Dealer, ISDH media relations coordinator Megan Wade-Taxter said that Indiana had two probable cases of monkeypox at that time.

"No additional information is available about patients due to privacy concerns," said Wade-Taxter. "The risk to the general public continues to be extremely low, but we encourage anyone with risk factors to monitor for signs and symptoms and consult a healthcare professional."

The ISDH reported the first probable case of monkeypox in the state on June 18.

"Initial testing was completed at the ISDH Laboratories," stated the ISDH. "Confirmatory testing is pending at the CDC. Based on the initial positive test and preliminary case investigation, state health officials consider this a probable monkeypox infection. The patient remains isolated, and health officials are working to identify anyone the patient may have had close contact with while infectious."

At the time of Indiana's first case, the CDC reported that 113 monkeypox cases had been confirmed in 21 U.S. states and territories in 2022.

Monkeypox is a rare disease caused by infection with the monkeypox virus, which is part of the same family of viruses as smallpox. Symptoms are similar to smallpox but milder, and monkeypox is rarely fatal. The illness typically begins with fever, headache, chills, muscle aches and exhaustion about five to 21 days after exposure. Within one to three days (sometimes longer) after the appearance of fever, the patient develops a rash. The rash may start in the mouth or any part of the body before spreading. Some people may only develop the rash. The illness typically lasts for two to four weeks. People are considered infectious until all scabs from the rash have fallen off and a fresh layer of skin has formed.

Person-to-person transmission is possible either through skin-to-skin contact with body fluids, monkeypox sores or contaminated items, such as bedding or clothing or through exposure to respiratory droplets during prolonged face-to-face contact.

The Wabash Plain Dealer encourages your letters to the editor forum, which is designed to be a forum for exchange of ideas between readers about issues of community importance.

Please sign your letter. Your name will be used with the letter that is published in the Plain Dealer. Your letter will be returned if it is your desire to remain anonymous.

Since we may want to write or call you to verify the letter, we ask that you include your address and telephone number. All our letters to the editor are published in the interest of fair play, so we trust our letter writers will refrain from personal attacks on other persons or groups.

A letter should be less than two pages long, preferably of double-spaced typing.

In order to give everyone an opportunity to participate in this exchange of ideas, please try to limit your letters to one per month per household.

To submit a letter, please write the Wabash Plain Dealer at 99 W. Canal St., Wabash, IN 46992.

Letters also may be hand-delivered to the newspaper office, 99 W. Canal St. The office is open 9-11:30 a.m. and 1-4 p.m. Monday through Friday. If you should deliver a letter during non-business hours, a drop slot is located to the left of the front door. Letters may be faxed to 260-563-0816, or email them to news@wabashplaindealer.com with "Letters to the Editor" in the subject line.

DAILY SCRIPTURE

Remember not the sins of my youth or my transgressions; according to your steadfast love remember me, for the sake of your goodness, O LORD!

Psalm 25:7

New members of Congress should take class on Constitution

The beauty of our democratic system of government is that anyone can get elected. But that feature is also a bug. We suspect we aren't alone among Americans who watch some of the antics on Capitol Hill and think, "How on Earth did that person get elected?" Sometimes it seems that politicians know little more than how to win votes.

To take one recent example: In his first interview after being elected to the U.S. Senate in 2020, Republican Tommy Tuberville, the former Auburn University football coach, misidentified the three branches of our government, claimed that World War II was fought against European socialists, and promised to use his Senate resources to campaign for fellow Republicans, which is illegal.

Tuberville isn't the only one. Examples abound from both parties.

Last fall, Rep. John Yarmuth, D-Ky., suggested that the government "absolutely cannot go bankrupt because we have the power to create as much money as we need to spend."

Nor are politicians outliers. According to the latest installment of the annual Constitution Day Civics Survey by the Annenberg Public Policy Center of the University of Pennsylvania, 44 percent of Americans would join Tuberville in misidentifying the branches of government.

Every elected representative doesn't have to be John Locke, but it would be nice if Americans could have a bit more confidence in Beltway brainpower. U.S. Rep. Liz Cheney, R-Wyo., has an idea that could help, and we think she should pursue it.

In an interview with David Kramer of the George W. Bush Institute last month, Cheney said Congress should institute a "Constitution Boot Camp" for freshman members of Congress. Cheney said freshman onboarding includes a lot of nuts-and-bolts training like "Appropriations Boot Camp" to help lawmakers navigate Washington. But it doesn't include any political philosophy or history.

An official with the minority Committee on House Administration, which handles freshman orientation, told us various seminars are offered to new lawmakers, but only three are required: workplace rights, ethics and cybersecurity.

We remember a day when it was fashionable among elected leaders to carry pocket-size copies of the Constitution, like talismans of patriotism. We don't think Cheney's idea should be about such preening, but a serious crash course in the unique beauty of the American system of government and the genius of its framers.

Cheney has a few important things on her to-do list right now, including a congressional investigation into a former president accused of betraying that very Constitution. When she gets done, we encourage her to implement the Congressional Constitution Boot Camp.

Reflections on my first year

Kelly Miller
CING Publisher

My one year anniversary in Marion is quickly approaching. I returned to Paxton Media Group as group publisher of CING on August 2, 2021. I started my career with PMG in 1996 in St. Joseph, Michigan. So many things have changed in 26 years. However, one thing that has never changed is my commitment to provide the best local news coverage possible.

Not too long ago, I was invited to speak at the Marion Rotary Club about myself and the newspaper business. The topic I landed on, which I think is timely and relevant, was the expanding newspaper deserts in our nation.

Two hundred U.S. counties no longer have a local newspaper.

That means there's no one dedicated to following up on local city, county, or school board meetings, asking questions about dollars or decisions. There's no one dedicated to reviewing arrest reports, to write about significant crimes happening in those neighborhoods, or ask pesky questions about particular arrests. There is no one dedicated to taking photos of new arrivals, new businesses or introducing people who will fill important and trusted roles.

Of the 8,000 or so newspapers left in the nation, many are now owned by a hedge fund or other corporate entity that is more responsible to shareholders than to community stakeholders. Yet the decisions by these newspapers will have a direct impact on the health and vitality of these communities.

Central Indiana Newspaper Group is owned by Paxton Media Group, one of the few remaining family owned media companies. I know PMG cares about the quality of news we produce and the future of journalism. Recently, CING invested in scholarships at both IWU and Taylor University for journalism students. We are invested in central Indiana.

To continue our mission of tying communities together, we know it's imperative we adapt to the digital age. We are working on that. We are striving to make our websites and commercial systems user friendly.

Strong Communities have people who care about what is going on, and people who care about what is going on tend to subscribe to their local newspaper. They want to know what the problems are so they can take a hand in the solutions. I am often reminded, when I talk about the state of the newspaper business, of a survey I saw several years ago. In the survey, strong communities had strong newspapers and strong hospitals. We should have both.

We, too, want to be part of the solutions. But we need your help to do this. We need your news tips, we need your subscriptions, and yes, we need your advertising too. With these things we can continue to bridge the gap between the businesses and the people who live and work in our communities. I hope, if you are reading this, that you are one of those community members who care about the future of our community, whether that is Marion, Huntington, Peru, Wabash or Frankfort, and that you will consider doing one of these things to help us keep the conversations about the community's health and well-being moving forward into the next century.

We are committed to providing the best product we can long into the future.

Kelly Miller is the group publisher of the Central Indiana Newspaper Group which includes the Marion Chronicle-Tribune, Peru Tribune, The Frankfort Times, Wabash Plain Dealer and The Huntington Herald-Press.

The tensions of economic policy in a volatile time

Michael Hicks

The United States appears to be in the middle of a major political realignment. Really, this topic is in the domain of historians and political scientists, so I'll largely confine myself to writing about what this means for economic policy. To be honest, it is difficult to make a thoughtful assessment of where we are headed. Perhaps the best way to think about this is to consider the coalition debates surrounding abortion and how it challenges internal alliances within political parties.

If polls are to be trusted, there are about 15 percent of Americans who think abortion is always wrong, though most would allow it to save the life of the mother. If one believes life starts at conception, this is a wholly moral viewpoint. These people are mostly motivated by faith, and find themselves overwhelmingly supportive of GOP candidates, at least on this issue.

There is another, similarly sized share of Americans who do not believe that abortion decisions are within the appropriate sphere of government control. They feel government should not be permitted to interfere on these matters, as it outside their competence. That is a decidedly Libertarian viewpoint, but for most of the past few decades, Libertarians have tended to lean towards the GOP. Still, this is not a typical GOP position on abortion legislation.

Any one of us could hold both views at the same time. The problem is that these two views have very different policy choices. A party forced to make these choices faces considerable strain and will surely lose some members to the other side. That's normal in the give and take of politics. What makes this time different is the vast number of these tensions taking place amid an increasingly polarized political environment.

Both parties tend to have elected representatives that are politically farther away from the median voter than at any time in recent decades. There are still moderates, but leading a political party whose elected officials are heavily filled from those on the extreme fringe of public opinion is a challenge. The main obstacle lies in crafting policies that keep the coalition from splintering.

Several economic issues at the federal and state and local levels risk fracturing the coalition of both parties. In recent years, both parties have developed large shares of their coalition on both sides of major issues like trade, tax and industrial policy. One broad observation is that the fringe of both parties tends to be in more agreement with their political foes than their own centrist party members.

The progressive left has long-opposed free trade and supported industrial policy that delivered incentives to favored industries. For the past few decades, moderate Democrats and the GOP disagreed. Today, there is a growing share of Republicans who align more closely with progressives on these matters. Donald Trump was able to corral these voters and reversed decades of success in trade while shoveling cash to favored industries.

These 'economic nationalists' or Republican Socialists may be a tenuous part of the GOP coalition. Or, they may be the new power in the party. Most voters won't change party alignment due to trade or tax giveaway. But, in combination with cultural and foreign policy questions, we could see highly volatile political coalitions in the coming years.

I think the evidence is pretty strong that the broad economic policies promoted by the progressives and 'economic nationalists' will be unsuccessful. Still, it'll be difficult to clearly see policy failure because these policies affect us all. I should also add that the diehard Sanders and Trump supporters have not proven to be especially susceptible to evidence-based policy analysis.

However, at the state and local level, broad policy differences drive people to vote with their feet. This means that policy successes and failures are far more likely to appear in states, cities and counties than in the nation as a whole. This is a feature, not a bug, of our national system of government, but its value lies in learning from facts and the experience of others.

Over the past few decades, local economic policy has become more polarized. The results are increasingly obvious. It is counter-intuitive to many, but nearly all growth is occurring in places where state and local taxes are higher. Part of this is because affluent people are increasingly clustering together, but part of it is due to families placing more value on public services. Remember, taxes are the price of public services. Families and business alike choose where they locate based on value, not price.

A half-century ago, the American Housing Survey didn't even ask families who moved if it was because of school quality. Today, that is the number one reason families move. Higher taxes provide more money for schools, which affects quality. While school quality isn't solely about money, the research evidence is pretty clear that money does matter. Far more importantly, families think it matters, as migration data have made clear for three decades. Businesses follow these families to tap into the workforce and consumer base, so the places that create jobs are increasingly the places who educate students well and provide other services.

The good news is that state and local economic policies are not a party monolith. Both Kansas and San Francisco have recently demonstrated the economic futility of extremist tax and spending policies that are unconnected to the quality of schools, roads and public safety. Here, GOP and Democratic candidates were punished for their extremist policies.

However, places that emphasized the low-tax, low-spending model have performed poorly in the key measures of job growth, population growth and income growth. Conversely, places that pay insufficient attention to fundamental governance issues, like public safety, or who overpay for services likewise perform poorly on economic fundamentals of growth.

Altogether, these developments will place great pressure on political coalitions built around economic issues. In both parties, we now having growing shares of voters who align more closely with a growing share of voters in the other party than with their own. This misalignment is more pronounced when local and national economic goals surrounding spending and taxes lack coherence. The economic policies of tax incentives, student loan forgiveness, trade, tax rates, and many others have never been more disconnected from the core Republican and Democrat arguments of the 2000s than they are today.

So, on economic policy alone, we live in fractured times surrounding party alignment. I don't have any good predictions on where this will end up, only that we are in an especially volatile period of economic policy alliances in our political parties.

prevention and recovery," said Ellis.

"Prevent, Recover and Rock Together" performances by Gracious and 2:8 Ministries will be on Miami Street from 5 to 8 p.m. Vendor booths will be inside the Eagles Theatre lobby from 7 to 9 p.m.

Ellis said Ballenger will share his recovery story in music from 7 to 8:30 p.m. at Eagles Theatre, followed by a meet-and-greet with Ballenger, Knuckles and John Humphries from 8:30 to 9 p.m.

"In addition to live music on Miami Street, First Friday will span the entire downtown district with kid-friendly activities, vendors and food trucks at Paradise Spring Historical Park, boutique shopping specials throughout, free rides on Trolley No. 85 provided by Beacon Credit Union, more food trucks throughout downtown and drinks and dining specials in local restaurants," said Ellis.

Wabash County Tobacco Free Coalition (WCTFC) director Dan Gray said the "Prevent, Recover and Rock Together" event was planned to keep Wabash County aware of the impact illicit drugs and tobacco have on our communities."

Gray said the event would be "an evening of entertainment and information"

"The nationally-known RALI CARES – Hidden in Plain Sight trailer will be a part of the evening activities," said Gray. "It is outfitted to look like a teenager's or young adult's bedroom, but it is filled with hidden warning signs of substance misuse."

Gray said former law enforcement and experts will "point out the red flags of substance misuse based on their years of experience and discuss ways to seek help if someone is struggling with addiction."

Gray said the trailer has traveled all over the country educating parents, grandparents, teachers and caregivers.

Ellis said Downtown Wabash First Fridays in 2022 are sponsored by Crossroads Bank, Beacon Credit Union, 95.9 KISS FM, Wabash County Museum and Pettit Printing.

The Mom of an Addict support group meeting in Wabash County

The Mom of an Addict, an organization offering education and support to families who have been affected by a loved one's substance use disorder, is adding an in-person meeting location in Wabash County, according to founder and director Jennifer Hope. The new meetings will be held weekly beginning at 6:30 p.m. Wednesdays at Congregational Christian Church, 310 N. Walnut St., North Manchester. At the free support group meetings, parents, grandparents, spouses, siblings, children and friends will find others who understand what they are going through with their loved ones. The meetings have an educational component for the first 30 minutes, and the next hour is spent in small group sharing settings. The educational component addresses many topics associated with addiction, such as the science of the disease of addiction, different types of drugs, enabling, detaching with love, setting healthy boundaries, types of treatment available, communication with our child, self-care, co-occurring disorders, relapse and ending the stigma. There will be guest speakers from time to time to address other specific topics. The meeting is open, and whether a loved one is currently using, is in recovery, is incarcerated or is deceased, everyone is encouraged to attend. Additional in-person and online meeting locations can be found by clicking on the Support Groups tab by visiting www.themomofanaddict.org.

Editor's note: If you have an upcoming event to submit, please send it by email to news@wabashplaindealer.com no later than five days before the event itself. Please use complete sentences, Associated Press style and Microsoft Word or PDF file formats.

Kaleidoscope Gallery welcomes Pamela Hoover

Provided photos

The North Manchester Center for History (NMCH) will welcome Pamela Hoover, owner of The Samplermaker, to their artist's gallery, according to director Laura Rager.

Artist's reception planned for Friday, Aug. 12 at the NMCH

STAFF REPORT

The North Manchester Center for History (NMCH) will welcome Pamela Hoover, owner of The Samplermaker, to their artist's gallery, according to director Laura Rager.

There will be an artist's reception for Hoover in conjunction with Second Fridays from 5 to 7 p.m. Friday, Aug. 12 at the NMCH, 122 E. Main St., North Manchester.

The Samplermaker exhibit will remain in the Kaleidoscope Gallery through mid-November. The Center for History is open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesdays through Fridays, and 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturdays.

"Hoover, who grew up in North Manchester, has been creating one-of-a-kind cross stitch samplers for over 35 years," said Rager. "Her designs mimic those from the 1800s, but all of her works are original – down to the unusual names that she invents for the 'fictitious stitcher.'"

Rager said Hoover began collecting antique samplers in the 1980s and found that she was curious about the person who had created them.

"What was the significance of the words and symbols she used? Where was she raised and who taught her to stitch?" said Hoover.

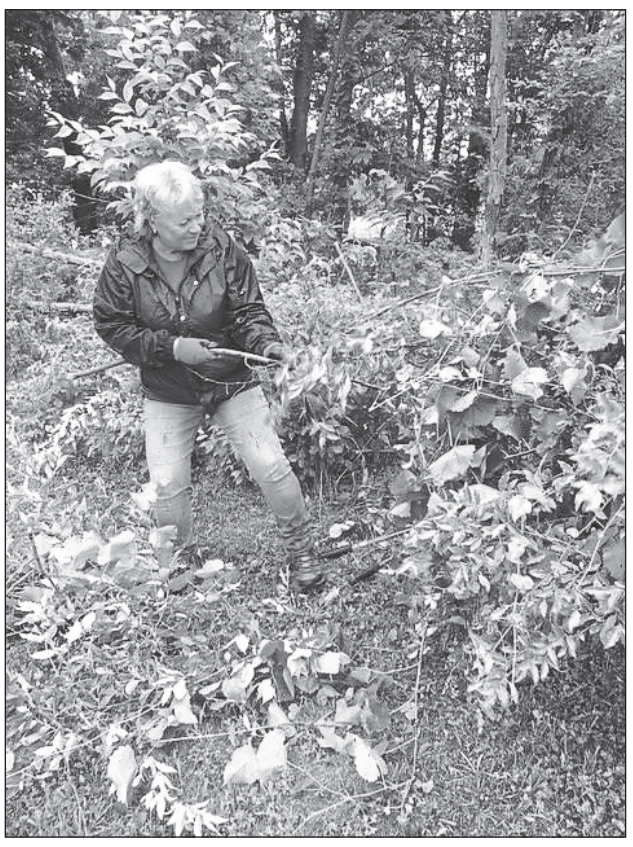

Rager said soon Hoover began creating her samplers that tell their own story.

"Samplers, like those Hoover creates, are done in cross-stitch which is a type of hand embroidery dating back to the Middle Ages. Originally samplers were meant to provide stitchers a means to keep a record of their favorite stitches and patterns. These were done on long strips of narrow cloth – creating samplers. These weren't considered art – but were rolled up and stored so that patterns and stitches could be accessed easily," said Rager. "In later years, samplers became a means to educate young women. While learning to cross stitch and do embroidery, girls would use Bible verses and quotes relating moral values in their work."

Hoover said her works include, "Biblical and poetic verses, literature or observations of events happening around me."

Rager said Hoover's pieces often have contemporary twists in them – including a nod to Sir Paul McCartney in one.

There will be an artist's reception for Hoover in conjunction with Second Fridays from 5 to 7 p.m. Friday, Aug. 12 at the NMCH, 122 E. Main St., North Manchester.

Member of UWIN and Miami County SWCD program director Mary Lou Watson tackles Autumn olive.

Austin Prater was named "2021 Weed Wrangler of the Year," "due to his passion for invasive species removal and believes eradication is important to our forests and wildlife habitat."

Invasive control workshop set for Thursday, Aug. 18, at Salamonie Lake

Event to focus on Poison Hemlock, Honeysuckle and Autumn Olive

STAFF REPORT

Attend this free environmental workshop, "Where to begin? Invasive control for Poison Hemlock, Honeysuckle, and Autumn Olive" from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 18, at Salalmonie Lake's Interpretive Center, 3691 S. New Holland Road, Andrews, according to interpretive naturalist Teresa Rody.

The workshop, hosted by the Upper Wabash Invasives Network (UWIN) group, is for, but is not limited to landowners, farmers, cemetery caretakers, Highway and County Road Department workers and volunteers.

"Learn how to ID these invasive species," said Rody. "Find time-saving and cost-efficient methods to remove unwanted – and sometimes dangerous – vegetation making leaps and bounds across our landscape. Continuing education credit available for a fee to those maintaining certifications."

The schedule includes:

■ 9 a.m.: Tour upland forest, wetland and warm season grass and forb habitat types in Salamonie Lake's management areas to learn how habitat improvement has changed through the years within the Indiana Department of Natural Resources (DNR). This property originated as farm and family home sites with small acreages of the forest. Some early management practices across the USA in the 1950s and beyond actually made some invasive species on these sites worse. Learn identification and hear about prioritizing and other financially and time-realistic management decisions. This will include driving to locations and a small amount of walking. The speaker will be DNR wildlife specialist Justin Emmons.

■ 11:30 a.m. to noon: Lunch will be provided by UWIN. Reservations are required.

■ Noon to 12:45 p.m.: There will be an "Invasive Scenarios and Discussion" with speaker Purdue Extension educator Geoff Schortgen. He will provide cost and time-efficient solutions; and how to schedule and manage Plans A and B. This will take place indoors.

■ 12:45 to 1:30 p.m.: This presentation will include modes of action, herbicides, tools and more.

■ 1:30 to 2 p.m.: This will be a control equipment demonstration with Rody and Emmons.

■ 2 p.m.: This will be the final discussion.

The registration deadline for lunch and workshop is Monday, Aug. 8.

Participants should plan to bring a water bottle and bug spray as there will be a short amount of walking.

To register, call 260-468-2127.

For more information, visit dnr.IN.gov.

Rhoda Gerig shares 'More than Eagles' wildlife photos

Award-winning photographer's collection to be featured at Honeywell House event

STAFF REPORT

National Geographic award-winning photographer Rhoda Gerig will present "More than Eagles," an array of wildlife photos from her collection, at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 9, at the Honeywell House, 720 N. Wabash St., according to Honeywell Arts & Entertainment digital marketing director Kaitlynn Still.

"Gerig, known for her photos of eagles, is a gifted photographer who will share a presentation featuring images of many types of wildlife," said Still. "Among her numerous awards, Gerig has won Best of Show at numerous Honeywell Foundation shows, along with 14 other winning photographs. Gerig has created many Garden of Eagles calendars, has been published in Outdoor Indiana and has been chosen for the National Geographic Daily Dozen four times and has taken the top honor once."

As always, most of the events at the Honeywell House are free to the public, but due to limited seating, reservations are required. Reserve your spot now by calling 260-563-1102 or by visiting www.honeywellarts.org.

Grow Wabash County promotes the business community on the global stage

STAFF REPORT

Wabash County was in the global spotlight this summer when members of the Grow Wabash County team, attended the Hannover Messe trade show in Hanover, Germany as well as the Select USA trade show in Washington, DC, according to Grow Wabash County project manager for marketing and events Chelsea Boulrisse.

Boulrisse said during their first trip, which took them to Germany and Italy, Mayor Scott Long, Grow Wabash County president and CEO Keith Gillenwater and Grow Wabash County vice president Tenille Zartman held meetings with various European companies looking to expand and/or relocate their operations to the United States.

"As mayor, I cannot sit back and wait for a company to 'knock' on Wabash's door to locate here," Wabash Mayor Scott Long said. "I traveled to Hannover Messe to make introductions to various companies from throughout Europe. The meetings that we held with representatives of these companies were productive, and this is the first step in attracting Foreign Direct Investment into Wabash and Wabash County. I anticipate more trips such as this will occur in the future to keep the lines of communication open with companies seeking to invest in the United States."

In addition to meeting with multiple companies during the trade show, the group also traveled to Italy to meet with the leadership team at Hello Nature, a company that recently announced its plans to build a 300,000-square-foot facility in Wabash County to house their BioNutrients operation, which was the result of Hello Nature's partnership with MPS Egg Farms.

Shortly after their return from Europe, Gillenwater and Zartman represented Wabash County at the Select USA trade show in Washington, DC where they again met with companies looking to locate and expand into the United States, many eager to learn about what Wabash County had to offer them and their businesses.

The meetings held by the team throughout these two trips, as well as meetings taking place here in Wabash County because of those visits, are all part of a robust foreign direct investment (FDI) strategy that was developed as a result of the tremendous support Grow Wabash County received through their "Growth Starts Here" capital campaign.

In collaboration with Navigator Consulting and the Trans-Atlantic Business and Investment Council, the FDI strategy worked to focus Wabash County's message to a variety of international audiences to spark further growth and business development in the community and laid out a roadmap for how to successfully implement the goals of increasing FDI activity in Wabash County.

"It's an honor to represent our community and all of the many benefits of doing business in Wabash County," said Gillenwater. "In the last several weeks, we've conducted dozens of individual company meetings, visited factories across Europe, met with numerous site location consultants, and even attended a reception at the residence of the Ambassador of Japan where we connected with several Japanese businesses looking to locate in the US. Coupled with the ongoing efforts to bring businesses from all over to Wabash County, we are applying a full-court press for new opportunities right here in our community."

Boulrisse said moving forward, Grow Wabash County looks forward to connecting with even more companies, domestic and abroad to show the business world that Wabash County is the ideal setting for business development, growth and prosperity.

Prolific California artist on display at Honeywell Gallery

Mary Zarbano's exhibit 'Dreamscapes' will run through Sunday, Aug. 21

Provided photos

Now through Sunday, Aug. 21, Mary Zarbano's work will be on display at the Clark Gallery at the Honeywell Center.

As is the case with many visual artists, the full scope of an artist's work goes generally unappreciated until after their passing, according to Honeywell Arts & Entertainment digital marketing manager Kaitlynn Still.

"Vincent van Gogh sold one painting during his lifetime and passed away without notice – fast forward precisely a century and one of his paintings sells for $148 million at auction," said Still. "Why does it take so long for an artist to become a sensation? We may never know, but such may very well be the case for the California artist, Mary Zarbano."

Still said Zarbano, who was born in 1931 in Nebraska, became heavily influenced by modernist painters.

"After studying with Picasso and Chagall in New York, she settled in Buena Park, California, and painted every day of her life until her passing in 2019," said Still. "Immensely prolific, not just as a painter but also a sculptor, Zarbano's work has been exhibited many times in California during her life but never left the west coast."

Now through Sunday, Aug. 21, Zarbano's work will be on display at the Clark Gallery at the Honeywell Center. The gallery is open for viewing from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays and for two hours before live performances in the Ford Theater.

"Zarbano's paintings are truly unique. The influence of the modernist painters is apparent – the angular lines are reminiscent of cubism as are the abstracted features of its human subjects. Nevertheless, Zarbano's work is also very much her own."

Julie Dickey, the owner of the nearly 180 pieces in Zarbano's estate, said her paintings are "deeply intimate and often feature women and children in muted palettes with flashes of vibrant color."

"Her work is the story of her life, and you can tell that she's not always had a happy life," said Dickey.

Still said Zarbano's life was not without trials – she and her first husband had two daughters, each diagnosed and institutionalized for schizophrenia.

"Despite these trials, Zarbano was a warm, giving, generous, member of the Fullerton, California artist community Dickey was also a part of,," said Still.

Dickey said Zarbano inspired other artists and took a unique approach to present her work.

"She never wanted to tell a viewer how to feel about what they were seeing," says Dickey. "A lot of her work didn't have names, or she would write the name on the back and not post it because she didn't want to predispose people to how it would move them."

Dickey said in this spirit, the paintings on display at the Clark Gallery will only have numbers to mark them.

Dickey, herself a California native, said she came to know Zarbano through a nonprofit arts organization Zarbano often donated paintings too for fundraising events.

"We are willing to part with paintings for less than what Mary would have charged," said Dickey. "What's important is that these pieces go to people that it speaks to. Her worst nightmare was that she would see a piece of her work in a thrift store or garage sale. … Art tells a story to different people in different ways. And that story moves people."

Still said unsold paintings will be on display in Dickey's soon-to-open artist's hangout and studio, 4 Partners in Crime, set to open in October, so Zarbano can continue to inspire the future artists that study there.

"Today, when art is so easily consumed on our smartphones, computers and other digital devices, it feels like an ancient luxury to view a piece of original art in person and even more of a luxury to purchase one for your home. But whether you own it or not, standing in front of a painting promises an intimate experience unique to each viewer," said Still.

Concrete improvement

Soy-based sealant seen as environmentally friendly solution for road projects

By KEN DE LA BASTIDE
(Anderson) Herald Bulletin

For many highway officials in Indiana, the chore of maintaining more than 200,000 miles of paved roads around the state is a seemingly perpetual process of planning, proposing and paving.

A new soy-based concrete sealant may also make it an environmentally beneficial task.

PoreShield, a substance its inventors describe as a concrete durability enhancer, is gaining traction as a promising solution not only for lengthening the lifespan of roads and bridges but also as a boost to improving the environment.

"Since it's applied topically and it absorbs into the concrete and fills the pores, it works on really any kind of concrete, whether it's new or existing or whether it's horizontal or vertical," said Paul Imbrock, who served as the technical lead for the Indiana Soybean Alliance's PoreShield project. "We've done a lot of bridge decks, and it's been really well received, especially around the state of Indiana."

The solution is applied to surfaces by spraying from backpack-style tanks, much like mosquito repellant treatments. Since it's almost completely natural, those applying the product need no personal protective equipment.

Earlier this year, workers in southern Indiana's Orange County applied PoreShield to some of the county's more than 50 bridges. The county used an ISA grant valued at about $2,000 to purchase a 55-gallon drum of the solution – money officials believe was well spent.

"We did some of the sealing over running water, and it was nice to not have to stress out if we got a few drips down in the stream," said Carl Anderson, highway superintendent in Orange County. "I do like the product. Any time you can keep the moisture out of those cracks, it's going to make it last a lot longer."

PoreShield emerged from a years-long research project at Purdue University undertaken in part to meet a request from the Indiana Department of Transportation for a more durable, cost-effective alternative to hazardous, silane-based sealants in use in the early 2000s.

"An environmentally friendly, sustainable product was certainly one of the aims that came out of that research project," said Scott Manning, deputy chief of staff for INDOT. "That was one of the intents, along with being able to achieve the desired results from a standards and specifications standpoint in the field as well as cost-effectiveness."

The problem addressed in the research, Imbrock explained, originates in the design of most roads in use today.

The center lines cover pavement joints that must be cut to control cracking near those joints. But cutting those joints, he said, leaves tiny hollow areas that invariably attract water which, throughout a year's worth of Indiana weather, repeatedly freezes and melts. When repeated over several years, Imbrock said the process "leaves crystal and salt behind … and really aggressively deteriorates that pavement."

A team led by Purdue engineering professors Jason Weiss and Bernard Tao began researching soy methyl ester, a substance produced when triglycerides are chemically converted into biodiesel fuels. They found that, with its non-toxic properties and scarcity of volatile organic compounds (VOCs), soy methyl ester is slow to evaporate, which prolongs its useful solvent life and increases its effectiveness as a preserving agent for mixtures like concrete.

Imbrock noted that road treatment methods that made use of agricultural products already existed but weren't as environmentally friendly as the approach the emerging PoreShield technology was built on.

"I think one thing that these professors had in mind was that for something to work on this level, it needs to be very scalable as far as the technology being able to grow," Imbrock said. "The goal was for departments of transportation to be able to take something like this on and use it on every mile of concrete pavement."

Each gallon of PoreShield solution is made from a bushel of soybeans, according to the ISA. A gallon covers, on average, about 180 square feet of bridge decking, and approximately 200 bushels of soybeans will produce enough solution to treat a mile of two-lane pavement.

"We're thrilled with it as much as anything because it's another way folks can use soybeans," said Dave Blower, news and media relations manager for the Indiana Soybean Alliance.

Manning noted that while PoreShield can be used in virtually all types of road projects, its longer cure time – a result in part of the soy methyl ester needing longer to evaporate – makes it more ideally suited for major building or reconstruction projects, as opposed to quick overnight patch jobs.

For now, INDOT likely will not make PoreShield a mandatory component in its project contracts, he said.

"It's one tool in the tool kit," Manning said. "It's really identifying on a case-by-case basis and determining which products can best meet our needs in a given scenario."

NASCAR and IndyCar intersect at Indianapolis extravaganza

By JENNA FRYER
AP Auto Racing Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Now is the time to tune into American motorsports, on display all weekend at Indianapolis Motor Speedway, where NASCAR and IndyCar intersect with both series embroiled in turmoil.

Two-time IndyCar champion Josef Newgarden was cleared to compete on the road course on Indy's hallowed grounds after successfully completing Friday morning practice and passing a third medical evaluation. The driver from Nashville collapsed and hit his head on Sunday at Iowa Speedway about 90 minutes after he'd crashed while leading the race.

He said he assumes he suffered a concussion when he hit his head in the motorhome lot but spent the first part of the week somewhat isolated in an attempt to heal so he could race Saturday. Newgarden is chasing a third title.

"I really was very motivated to be here this weekend; I knew if we weren't in this race, it was going to be very difficult to stay in this championship fight," Newgarden said. "That was the end for me. I know that we have to be in the race, so whatever I have to do to be fit and prepared is No. 1 on my plate."

Kurt Busch, meanwhile, will miss his second consecutive NASCAR race because of concussion-like symptoms following a crash last weekend at Pocono. Chase Elliott heads into Sunday's race as NASCAR's most recent winner, but he inherited the victory in an unprecedented disqualification to Joe Gibbs Racing teammates Denny Hamlin and Kyle Busch.

Hamlin and Busch crossed the finish line 1-2, but their Toyotas failed postrace inspection and earned the first Cup Series disqualification since April 17, 1960. Emanuel Zervakis was stripped of his victory at Wilson Speedway in North Carolina because of an oversized fuel tank.

NASCAR is still five races away from its postseason, a 10-week knockout round to crown its champion. IndyCar, meanwhile, has five races remaining in its season and an incredibly tight six-driver title race.

Reigning champion Alex Palou is sixth in the standings, 44 points behind Indianapolis 500 winner Marcus Ericsson, but he's being sued by Chip Ganassi Racing over his desire to move to McLaren Racing next season.

Palou said ahead of Saturday's race that he still believes he can win a second consecutive title this year, and that he will be in the McLaren family in 2023. Team owner Chip Ganassi seemed exasperated.

"Good for him," Ganassi said. "I'm not making any statements. I have no quotes to give."

Newgarden also took the silent approach until after he'd qualified fifth for Saturday's race. His hard crash while leading the race – and the IndyCar standings until a broken suspension stopped his attempt at sweeping the Iowa doubleheader – dropped him into a tie for third in the standings and forced Team Penske to put Santino Ferrucci on standby in case Newgarden couldn't drive.

IndyCar's medical staff felt certain that Newgarden had passed all critical tests before he was medically cleared in Iowa, and if he did suffer a concussion, it came later when he collapsed in the parking lot. He visited a specialist this week, was re-evaluated at IMS on Thursday and then had yet another examination after logging the second-fastest laps in Friday morning practice.

Ferrucci seemed to have already been waved off by Penske on Thursday night when he tweeted he was thankful that Newgarden was healthy. Only problem? He incorrectly spelled it "Joseph" and Newgarden didn't like that one bit.

"It's Josef(asterisk)," he replied on Twitter. "At Penske, we care about details."

It was an aggressive response from Newgarden, who seemed to be staking claim on both his race car and his spot in the title race. Had he not been cleared to race, it likely would have ended his championship chances.

Newgarden said his reply to Ferrucci was in good fun.

"But from a factual standpoint, you know, the details do matter," Newgarden said. "It is important to remember here at Team Penske, we have a working style and we like to stick to it. I'm just trying to help the next batter up."

What about the oval?

NASCAR last year worked with Indianapolis track owner Roger Penske to shift its race from the famed oval to the road course as part of this blockbuster weekend.

But the Brickyard 400 was considered a NASCAR crown jewel despite waning interest from its 1994 debut through 27 runnings. Penske thought the move to the road course – and a shared weekend with IndyCar – would boost the importance of the event.

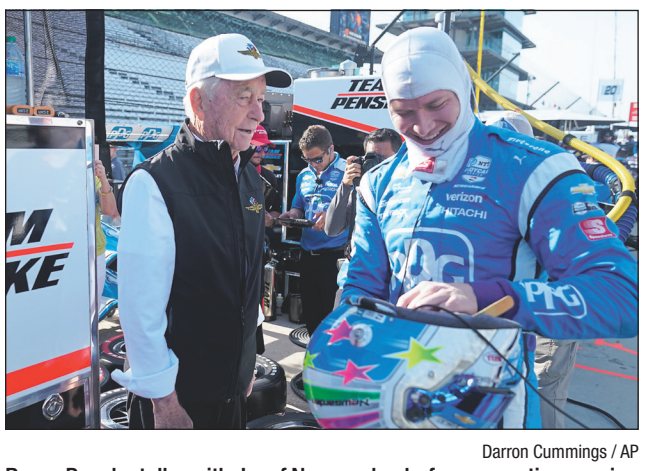

The race will likely be on the road course again next year, Penske confirmed this weekend. This year's version is a 14-turn, 2.439-mile paved course.

Byron fire

Hendrick Motorsports dodged disaster when a generator fire was extinguished before it damaged the Chevrolet that William Byron will race Sunday.

The team sent a backup transporter from North Carolina to the speedway on Friday, one day after the flames erupted inside the No. 24 truck as it waited to enter the speedway.

"A huge thank you to everyone who helped out with the 24 hauler today including the track, NASCAR, the local fire department and other team hauler drivers," Byron wrote on Twitter. "Everyone jumped in and helped our team out today and that support means a lot to all of us on the 24 team."

Dylan Stroud will further his wrestling career this winter at West Liberty, a Division II school in West Virginia.

Manchester's Dylan Stroud will wrestle at West Liberty

He will continue to wrestle in the 132-pound weight class, but with an extra pound allowance

By CLAY MAXFIELD
Wabash Plain Dealer Freelance Reporter

From one mat to another, Dylan Stroud will further his wrestling career this winter at West Liberty, a Division II school in West Virginia, where he will continue wrestling for the Hilltoppers.

"The opportunity is awesome," Stroud said. "A lot of kids from Manchester don't have the opportunity to go to college, especially (Division II), it's pretty big for Manchester. It's exciting knowing I got the whole town behind my back and being able to continue my wrestling career in college is exciting too with the people that I'm surrounded by in college, at Manchester, in my life."

For Stroud, the bond between himself and West Liberty came about after he attended a camp during the summer of his senior year.

"I went up to a camp during the summer, going into my senior year and just watching the kids on the team already, they're a family. It's more of a family than any other college. They're all close with each other. … The coaches are awesome and they keep up with you and most importantly they want you to be good in school."

Marian University, Trine and Indiana Tech among others were possible suitors for Stroud but in the end, West Liberty stood above the rest.

While at West Liberty, Stroud will look to complete his business degree with hopes to begin his own welding business in the future.

As a Hilltopper, Stroud will continue to wrestle in the same range of weight class as he did at Manchester – 132 pounds – but with an extra pound allowance at West Liberty.

Manchester head coach Byron Sweet knew early on that Stroud had the talent to be one of the Squires' next great wrestlers but what he didn't know was how far he could take it.

"I had a chance to start coaching Dylan when he was in sixth grade so it was actually kind of interesting to see his progression from that time in sixth grade," Sweet said. "He was a guy with a lot of talent at that point but you never know when you have these kids with a lot of talent how much you can get them to do."

Sweet added that Stroud's ability to push the envelope in terms of growth was what set him apart from other wrestlers.

"I think the great thing with Dylan was just he was able to get better each and every year. He wasn't a guy where he just rested on the fact that he had a lot of talent. He was able to make improvements each and every year.

Stroud became the second wrestler since 1984 to place in the IHSAA State Finals for Manchester High School when he finished seventh in the 132-pound weight class this past season. He finished his career with a record of 147-14 while finishing his 2022 campaign with a record of 38-2.

For Stroud, his dreams to wrestle at the next level wouldn't be a reality had it not been for those that pushed him along the way.

"It's incredible, it's exciting. Just to look back on all four years of the stuff I've accomplished, the things I couldn't have done without the people I've surrounded myself by," Stroud said. "They're all very supportive and they pushed me to be better."

QB Ryan challenges Colts with quick pace

By MICHAEL MAROT
Associated Press

WESTFIELD — Matt Ryan spent 14 seasons winning over coaches, teammates and fans with his sensational play in Atlanta.

Now, he's trying to do it all over again – in Indianapolis.

For the first time since his rookie season, Ryan is learning a new playbook at a new training camp facility and developing a new routine. After just two days of workouts, the Colts couldn't be more impressed with the results.

"When you've got a guy with Matt's experience you can kind of say 'Hey, here's what we want but trust your instincts. If you see it, call it, don't flinch, do what you've done your whole career,'" Colts coach Frank Reich said after practice Thursday. "It's a mentality, it's a confidence, it's 'we've got to get up and play'. We're dictating the tempo from the huddle to the call and we're going."

This is what Reich and general manager Chris Ballard anticipated when they traded a third-round pick to Atlanta for the 37-year-old quarterback in March.

The Falcons were rebuilding, making the league's 2016 MVP and the best quarterback in franchise history suddenly available.

Indianapolis, meanwhile, needed someone who could add stability and leadership after using five opening day starters in five seasons and then missing last season's playoffs by losing its final two games.

Ryan came with a strong resume that included four Pro Bowl selections, one Super Bowl appearance and top-10 rankings on the NFL's career list for yards passing (59,735) and touchdown passes (367).

But the game tape also convinced Reich and Ballard that Ryan was still in command, still playing at an elite level and still able to make a difference on a young team.

Naturally, he hasn't disappointed.

"Whenever he breaks a huddle, he's 'hurry up, get to the line, get to the line,'" left tackle Matt Pryor said. "To have a dominant offense, you want the offense getting to the line quick cause then the defenses are like, 'We've got to hurry up,' and maybe that'll throw them off a little bit."

The first part of Ryan's grand plan began in April when he won over teammates and coaches by quickly mastering the offense, adding confidence and humility to the locker room and building relationships.

Ryan's progression continued through the summer as he worked with other Colts players outside from the team complex. Through it all, he convinced everyone, he was the right man for the job.

"Whatever he's about to say, everyone's tuned in because you know it's going to be nothing but beneficial," defending NFL rushing champ Jonathan Taylor said in the spring. "So just having that leadership, that kind of person in the building. Being able to hear and learn from him and see how detailed he is, it makes you want to be that detailed."

It's been more of the same since the Colts reported to Westfield, Indiana, a northwestern suburb of Indy on Tuesday.

One key difference: Indy got in all of its scheduled offseason work for the first time in three years.

Another is Ryan's ability to adapt. Indy opened camp with four players, including three-time Pro Bowl linebacker Shaquille Leonard, on the physically unable to perform list following back surgery in June. Leonard told reporters Tuesday he wanted to be referred to by his middle name instead of his first name, Darius.

Since then, three players have been activated – though receiver Michael Strachan remains out. Indy also signed two receivers Tuesday.

But it hasn't slowed down Ryan.

While one fan tried to catch his attention by shouting "Iceman" on Thursday, Pryor and defensive end Yannick Ngakoue challenged themselves to keep up with Ryan.

Staff shortage hits pharmacies and their customers hard

Locals struggle to fill their prescriptions

By NOAH CRENSHAW
Daily Journal of Johnson County

Jennifer Gwin is a mother to 21 adopted children with different disabilities, and lately, she's been scrambling to get the medications they need.

Gwin, of Greenwood, has 50 medications to fill regularly for her children, making her a regular at the local Walgreens Pharmacy on U.S. 31 and Smith Valley Road. She rarely had issues.

filling her prescriptions until recently, as Walgreens has been facing pharmacy staff issues.

The pharmacy has been opening and closing at unpredictable hours, sometimes days at a time, because a pharmacist isn't available to work, Gwin said. And when the pharmacy is open, it takes days to fill a prescription because of the backlog.

The medications some of her children need are necessary for them to live, preventing trips to the hospital. Some are needed behavioral medications as well for her children with autism.

"So many of my kids need these to stay out of the hospital, you know, medications that keep them home and healthy," Gwin said."It's been a little scary at times because I've ran out of several."

While Gwin recognizes her circumstances are unique, but she knows this is an issue everyone is facing right now.

"I've gone to Facebook and such, you know, and asked groups, 'is everybody else having the same issue?' And I just get an overwhelming response of yes. It's crazy," she said.

Pharmacy staffing has become a nationwide issue. Customers are finding themselves calling in to fill a medication, only to learn a pharmacy is closed, or they waiting longer than average for medications to be filled when the pharmacy is open.

As labor shortages continue to plague other industries, especially in hospitals and private doctors' offices, pharmacies are also struggling to keep up with demand.

Labor shortage woes

Like with any labor shortage, it is difficult to pinpoint one direct cause, but the health care industry has been exhausted by the pandemic, community pharmacists included, said Stephanie Arnett, president-elect of the Indiana Pharmacists Association and director of student career development at the Purdue University School of Pharmacy.

Stress in the workplace of a community pharmacy is a strong contributing factor to pharmacists or techs leaving to find work elsewhere. More duties have been added to local pharmacy staffs since the pandemic, as they are now tasked with giving COVID-19 tests and vaccines, along with continuing to fill medications and administering routine vaccines.

"Initially, everybody was all hands on deck, it would save the world. But when you're in over two years of that, it puts a really big stress on our workers," Arnett said.

Staffing issues are hitting nearly every pharmacy locally, not just one. For Gwin, she has since started moving her prescriptions from Walgreens to CVS and Walmart. But that has also been a challenge because CVS is also very busy and employees had trouble getting a hold of Walgreens employees to transfer the prescriptions, she said.

Casey DeArmitt Hutchens waited a week to get one of her son's ADHD medication prescriptions filled from the Franklin Walgreens when it normally takes a day.

Due to staffing shortages, the Franklin pharmacy has been consistently closed on Sundays and Wednesdays and with limited hours during the week, Hutchens said. But on June 1, the pharmacy announced it would close from then until June 7. She tried to transfer her prescriptions to another location but had difficulties with insurance.

The Franklin Walgreens then opened on June 3, despite the announcement it would be closed, but could not fill new prescriptions because their system was down, Hutchens said. So, she drove to a Greenwood Walgreens on State Road 135, where she got her son's medication filled, nearly a week after she first requested the refill.

"I do, I feel for the local employees. I do, because I'm sure they're tired of getting yelled at," Hutchens said. "At the end of the day though, they're not dispensing Tic-Tacs – people need their medications."

Greenwood resident Mandie Lovelace had a similar experience waiting nearly a week for her son's medication. She arrived at a Walgreens location in Greenwood and waited in a long line, to find out the medicine was not ready for pickup when she was told by the pharmacy it would be.

She returned two days later – as the pharmacy was closed over those days – and was told the medicine was out of stock. Her son, who is on the autism spectrum, had to go without his medication for his last few days of school, she said.

"He ended up getting sick at school because he got so anxious without his medication," Lovelace said. "He's 17, so he knew what was going on. He was like, 'Mom, what am I gonna do?' then I said, 'Well, we're just gonna take it one day at a time.'"

Closing a pharmacy for an entire day is usually a last-resort option, Arnett said. By law, a store cannot open a pharmacy without a pharmacist in the building, leaving no other option but to close.

Noah Crenshaw / Daily Journal

A sign informing customers they cannot pick up their prescriptions due a pharmacist not being available is on display recently at the drive-thru of the Walgreens Pharmacy in Franklin.

Not one overnight solution

Walgreens declined a request for an interview and instead sent a statement from corporate spokesperson Kris Lathan. She wrote that stores with staffing shortages adjust hours of operation "with the goal of creating minimal disruption for customers and patients."

Lathan also wrote that patients can be transferred to the nearest open Walgreens if their primary location is closed. Adjusted store hours are reflected on the store locator, which is updated throughout the day at the Walgreens website and on the Walgreens mobile app, she said.

CVS Pharmacy also declined an interview, and Amy Thibault, lead director of the pharmacy's retail communications, said in a written statement that the pharmacy is not experiencing shortages in the Franklin area.

"Our pharmacy teams have been on the frontlines of the pandemic response for more than two years, administering COVID-19 tests and providing life-saving vaccinations. We've been successful in ensuring our stores remain open to help support our customers, patients and communities and are not experiencing any staffing issues in the Franklin, IN area," Thibault said in the statement.

Major chain pharmacies, such as Walgreens and CVS, have attempted to address staffing shortages by raising pay for pharmacists and pharmacy technicians, Arnett said. Sign-on bonuses are also usually offered for new hires now.

It is not a problem to be solved overnight, though, Arnett said. There also isn't one solution.

There is some hope with the pay increases, sign-on bonuses, and the number of graduates coming out of Indiana's three pharmacy schools at Purdue University, Butler University and Manchester University will increase. All three schools still have steady enrollment, but it is hard to predict where the graduates will go after school, or if they will stay in Indiana, Arnett said.

Pharmacists and technicians have more – and sometimes less stressful – opportunities beyond working at a chain retail community pharmacy, she said, such as working in labs or directly in a hospital or clinic.

"The pandemic has been really, really cruel to the wellbeing of frontline health care employees. And people are looking for something different," Arnett said.

Japan NE-Indiana Summit explores the future of the Indiana automotive industry

STAFF REPORT

Grow Wabash County hosted the 2022 Japan-Northeast Indiana Summit on Tuesday, July 19, at the Eagles Theatre, according to project manager for marketing and events Chelsea Boulrisse.

This year's summit was organized collaboratively with the Japan-America Society of Indiana (JASI) and the Northeast Indiana Regional Partnership (NEIRP) to bring together local leaders, economic development professionals and Japanese-owned businesses operating in northeast Indiana.

"The theme of this year's summit focused on automotive electrification and the exciting opportunities, as well as some of the challenges, that this growing trend may offer to the region," said Boulrisse.

The day began with remarks from Mayor Scott Long and JASI executive director Theresa Kulczak, both of whom reflected upon the importance of hosting a summit to further strengthen regional bonds with Japanese businesses.

Long said he connected the ideas of electrification back to Wabash's claim to fame as the world's first electrically lighted city.

"The Arc Light was just the start of the story of electrification in northeast Indiana," Long said, in his remarks. "That bright light long ago served as the spark that has resulted in the region's growing authority in the automotive industry regarding the development and manufacturing of electric vehicles."

Consul-General Hiroshi Tajima also attended the Summit and presented remarks on the importance, especially in this day and age, of fostering these international ties between Japan and northeast Indiana.

The rest of the day's agenda featured professionals from multiple companies and organizations presenting what's on the horizon in terms of automotive innovation and electrification.

After convening at the Parkview Ballroom for lunch, Grow Wabash County president and CEO Keith Gillenwater, moderated a panel focused on workforce development and how communities in northeast Indiana can best serve not only Japanese-owned companies in the area but all companies that are facing challenges connected to the ongoing labor shortage.

The summit concluded with a networking mixer that featured Japanese-influenced classical music performed by Elaina Robbins and Dr. Daniel Quinn.

"Grow Wabash County, JASI and NEIRP would like to extend a thank you to all of the companies and organizations that sponsored the 2022 Japan-Northeast Indiana Summit and helped make it a success," said Boulrisse.

Indiana community water systems face PFAS problem after EPA updates health advisory

North Manchester Water Department among those with unsafe PFOA or PFOS levels

By ENRIQUE SAENZ
Indiana Environmental Reporter

Several Indiana community water systems may now have to address "forever chemical" contamination after the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency updated its drinking water lifetime health advisory for four PFAS chemicals.

The EPA issued new interim drinking water lifetime health advisories for the PFAS chemicals PFOA and PFOS of .004 parts per trillion and .02 parts per trillion, respectively. The agency also established a 10-parts-per-trillion advisory for GenX chemicals and 2,000 parts per trillion for PFBS.

The new advisories replace more lenient lifetime health advisories of 70 parts per trillion for PFOA and PFOS issued during the Obama administration.

Community water systems around the state that were previously tested for PFAS chemicals and found to have safe levels of the chemicals could now have to reckon with the possibility of having to pay for expensive treatment options to protect their customers' health.

The 'forever chemicals'

PFAS chemicals have been used to manufacture products resistant to heat, oil, stains, grease and water since the 1940s.

The chemicals, which include PFOA and PFOS and successor chemicals GenX and PFBS, are more widely known by the brand names those chemicals helped produce, like Teflon, Scotchgard and Gore-Tex.

The chemicals have been linked to serious health risks like increased risk of kidney and testicular cancer, increased cholesterol levels, increased risk of high blood pressure or pre-eclampsia in pregnant women, decreased birth weight and decreased vaccine response in children.

Not only are the chemicals toxic, but they are also almost everywhere.

PFAS chemicals do not break down naturally and can remain in the environment for a very long time. The chemicals also bioaccumulate, meaning PFAS chemicals essentially collect in the environment or in our bodies over time.

The chemicals have been found in water, air, fish and soil in locations all around the world.

Some studies indicate that most Americans, especially manufacturing workers, have been exposed to PFAS contamination and that PFAS chemicals can remain in the human body for at least five years.

Despite evidence of the potential for PFAS chemicals to be in Indiana waterways, the extent of the potential contamination was unclear until recently.

PFAS in our water?

The Indiana Department of Environmental Management sampled water systems serving more than 10,000 people for some PFAS chemicals in 2014 and 2015 as part of the EPA's Unregulated Contaminant Monitoring Rule sampling.

Only one water system, the Town of Dyer Water Department, indicated the presence of PFAS chemicals beyond the minimum reporting level. The town's surface water indicated the presence of the chemicals PFOS and PFHxS in initial sampling, but, according to IDEM, subsequent testing showed no PFAS was detected.

Nearly 10 years after the EPA-mandated testing, IDEM began its PFAS testing, the IDEM PFAS Sampling Project for Community Public Water Systems.

The project set out to find where PFAS water contamination existed in the state and how effective conventional drinking water treatment was at treating PFAS chemicals. As part of the project, the agency would test water systems serving between 3,300 and 10,000 people in 2021, water systems serving less than 3,300 people in 2022 and water systems serving more than 10,000 people in 2023.

The agency released the final results of the first phase of testing in May, finding various PFAS chemicals in the raw water of 13 water systems and in the treated water of 10 systems.

None of the water systems sampled indicated the presence of PFAS chemicals above the EPA's 2016 PFOA and PFOS Drinking Water Health Advisories of 70 parts per trillion at the time the results were released. But many exceed the new advisory levels.

A non-enforceable advisory

The EPA's drinking water lifetime health advisories are unenforceable guidelines that indicate the level of drinking water contamination where adverse health effects are expected to occur.

IDEM uses the guidelines to determine when to investigate water systems that may need to undertake mitigation efforts to ensure the water Hoosiers drink remains safe.

According to the 2016 advisory, drinking water was determined to have "safe" amounts of the chemicals as long as concentrations for both PFOA and PFOS in samples did not surpass 70 parts per trillion together.

In June, the EPA announced the new interim lifetime health advisories for PFOA and PFOS and the advisories for GenX and PFBS, and, overnight, some of the water systems sampled had what the EPA considered unhealthy concentrations of PFOA and PFOS.

IDEM would not directly identify the water systems that now have PFOA/PFOS above the new interim advisory, but phase one results show at least 12 water systems overall have PFOA or PFOS levels beyond the EPA's advisory

The treated water of at least three water systems, Indiana American Water – Charlestown and Tennyson Water Utility in southern Indiana and North Manchester Water Department near Fort Wayne, indicate PFOA or PFOS at levels beyond what the EPA now considers safe.

IDEM said all community water systems with detections above the lifetime health advisory will be resampled for verification.

"If the results are confirmed greater than either the EPA health advisory or IDEM action levels, additional investigation may be necessary and mitigation options will be evaluated," the agency said in an email.

IDEM said it would help affected water systems improve filtration or chemical treatment to address the PFAS chemicals.

Doing so would allow the agency to help communities prepare for expected federal changes to drinking water requirements.

The EPA announced it would develop a National Primary Drinking Water Regulation, which would be legally enforceable primary standards and treatment techniques for public water systems, for PFOA and PFOS by the end of 2022. The regulation would go into effect in 2023.

It is unclear whether the permanent maximum contaminant levels allowed for the chemicals will match the interim drinking water lifetime health advisory's .004 parts per trillion for PFOA and .02 parts per trillion for PFOS or whether they will be more lenient.

The regulatory process, which will include public comment, will take into account the cost of meeting the new standards. For some water systems, meeting the maximum contaminant levels will require purchasing costly new equipment and other upgrades to existing treatment facilities.

The Association of State Drinking Water Administrators found that stricter PFOA/PFOS standards would cost more to meet than more lenient ones. An assessment of New York water systems found that a 4-parts-per-trillion MCL would cost $1.5 billion statewide for upgrades and a further $78 million per year for operation and maintenance, while an MCL of 36 parts per trillion would cost the state $366 million in statewide upgrades and $19 million in annual operation and maintenance.

On average, it would cost New York water systems $1.3 million per treatment system to meet a PFAS/PFOA MCL.

Some of the $5 billion in funding from the Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act to address emerging contaminants, including PFAS contamination, could be made available to Hoosier water systems through the Indiana Finance Authority. States will also receive part of $23 billion in new Clean Water and Drinking Water State Revolving Funds, which may be used to provide low-interest loans and grants to communities needing to improve their wastewater or drinking water infrastructure.

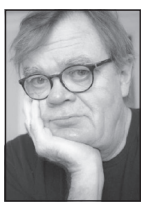

The investment in combatting PFAS contamination could save the nation money, as new research has found that daily exposure to PFAS chemicals could be creating a multi-billion-dollar economic burden.

The study, by researchers at New York University's Grossman School of Medicine, found the medical conditions that are believed to result from PFAS exposure, like infertility, diabetes and endometriosis, generate medical bills and reduce worker productivity across a lifetime totaling up to $63 billion nationwide.

"Our results strongly support the recent decision by the EPA to lower the safe allowable level of these substances in water," said NYU professor and study senior author Dr. Leonardo Trasande. "Based on our estimates, the cost of eradicating contamination and replacing this class of chemical with safer alternatives is ultimately justified when considering the tremendous economic and medical risks of allowing them to persist in the environment."

Listening to that lonesome whistle blow, etc.

Garrison Keillor

I am in the process of packing up and leaving Minnesota where I've lived for most of 80 years, which seems dramatic but isn't since most of my classmates left long ago and Bob Dylan, who overlapped with me at the University of Minnesota, heard the lonesome whistle blow and matriculated his way to New York and if Bob ever wrote a song about hating to leave home, I'm not aware of it. The itinerant life was what he was all about.

I am fond of Minnesota, the home of Hazelden and the recovery industry and America's front line of defense against the flood of illegals from Canada, which has led to the boom in hockey, the season now extending into summer. It's the home of Robert Bly, author of Iron John, which was big back when there was a men's movement but it disappeared due to gender fluidity when masculinity liquefied and men were no longer required to be solid granite. I tried to be Agnes for a while but it was too late, I was in my late 60s, stoicism was baked into me, voice-raising drugs had no effect, my eyebrows are bushy, and I hate hockey, which real Minnesota women are very good at.

All of my women friends play hockey from October to June and – I don't say this critically, believe me – they are very pushy for those eight months, and by "pushy" I don't mean bossy, I mean they pass you on the street and give you the hip and send you careening into a parking meter. I do not get into an elevator with women; it makes me perspire just thinking about it.

I'm leaving Minnesota because there are recovery groups for everything under the sun – grief at pet loss, height inadequacy, Scandophrenia, vegephobia, compulsive colorlessness, northpolar disorder, nomenclature amnesia, traumatic taciturnity, hypercalmness, disagreement anxiety, disaster anticipation, suppression, and so forth – you name it and there's a program for you where you will hear a talk and then break up into discussion groups, but there is no group for people in my category, old men at the high end of the contentment spectrum.

I've met men like me in Minnesota, and we eyeball each other and one of us says, "So how's it going then?" We add the "then" so the other guy knows we're from here. If I said, "So how's it going then?" to a New Yorker, he'd say, "You mean how was it going? And what period of time are you referring to?" But a Minnesotan says, "Not so bad then." He says it looking around to make sure no millennial hears who might grab him by the lapels and say, "Easy for you to say, having stolen land from the Lakota people and now living high off the hog thanks to the exploitation of woman and minorities."

It's true, of course. They're right to be righteous. Life is unfair. I had the advantage of having seventeen aunts who all loved me and encouraged me and believed I was gifted and praised my childish scribbling and my crazed literary ambitions and predicted I'd become somebody and so I did, I became me, and I got into show business though I have the personality of a village assessor but I learned to be affable and I found eye drops that make my eyes sparkle, but I recognize that not everyone had that advantage of admiring aunts.

Thanks to cowardice, I avoided contact sports and never was concussed, which made it possible for me to memorize the eighty-seven counties of Minnesota in alphabetic order and recite them at high speed. I was the only person in Minnesota who could do this and I did it dozens of times, once at the State Fair grandstand in front of thousands – Aitkin, Anoka, Becker, Beltrami, Benton, Big Stone, Blue Earth, Brown, and so forth – but once people have heard you do it, they're not eager to hear it again so it's time for me to go out in the world and make my way among strangers. I'm going to New York because I'm a fan of underground public rail transportation, and also because my wife loves New York and I love her. There's no better reason. If you've gone down the wrong romantic roads often enough and then find the right one, you will follow the woman where she leads. It's as simple as that.

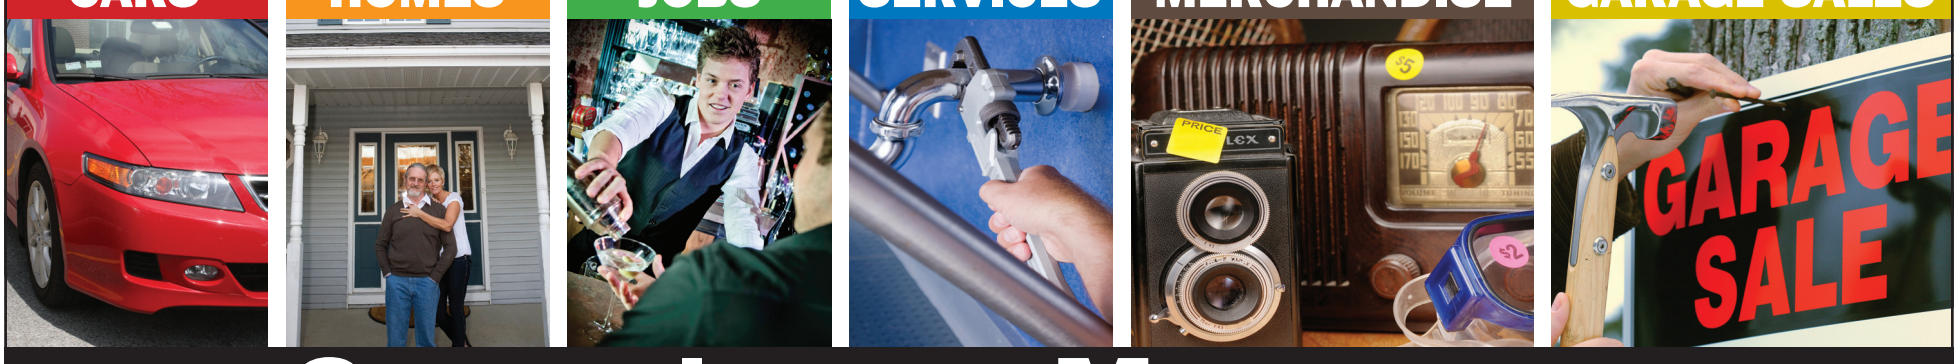

Garrison Keillor is the author of two new books, "Lake Wobegon Virus" and "That Time of Year (a memoir)."

Request for Qualifications Professional Consulting Services
Grow Wabash County Small Business E-Commerce Program
Wabash County, Indiana

Purpose:
Grow Wabash County (GWC) is seeking a qualified consultant to assist in developing and executing a program that will provide training and support for local small businesses to launch electronic commerce (e-commerce) platforms.
Statement of Qualifications (SOQ) shall be submitted by firms that have a capable and demonstrable background in the type of work described in this RFQ. In addition, all interested firms shall have sufficient, readily available resources in the form of trained personnel, support services, specialized consultants, access to relevant specialized software, and financial resources to carry out the work without delay or shortcomings to complete the project by December 31, 2022.

Location:
214 South Wabash Street, Wabash, IN 46992

Scope of Services:
GWC is seeking a qualified consultant to provide support and training to small business owners in Wabash County for the development and launch of an e-commerce website to boost their sales and business reach. The following services are anticipated but are not meant to be an inclusive list.

- E-Commerce platform development support
- One-on-One consulting with businesses regarding e-commerce strategies
- Training/Resources on various topics such as:
  - Introduction to e-commerce
  - E-commerce best practices
  - E-commerce platform maintenance
  - Troubleshooting e-commerce platforms prior to and after launch

There may be other services requested later. Those include, but are not limited to:
- Follow up with clients to ensure e-commerce site is functioning as expected

Intent
The intent of this RFQ is to provide for the administration of business services related to e-commerce practices to Wabash County small businesses. GWC has been awarded a grant from Region 3-A to cover costs related to the services rendered. The awarded firm's proposal will be used to provide business owners instruction and support related to e-commerce that will be funded by Grow Wabash County and reimbursed through the Region 3-A grant.

Timeline:
- July 23- Aug. 3, 2022 – Legal Ads and RFQ sent out for potential consultants
- September 2, 2022 – Deadline by 4pm to receive SOQ's from consultants
- September 6, 2022 – Select Consultant
- September 12, 2022 – Issue notice to proceed on the agreement
- December 31, 2022 - Deadline for project completion

Funding:
Project not to exceed $50,000 for consultant fees, training materials, software needs, and marketing, etc. Consultant selected will invoice Grow Wabash County for expenses with documentation then Grow Wabash County will reimburse consultant with funding provided by Region 3-A grant funds.

Submittal Information:
Three (3) hard copies and one (1) electronic copy in PDF format (Flash Drive) of the SOQ shall be submitted via mail or delivery.
The SOQ's shall be received no later than September 2, 2022 at 4pm. The SOQ's shall be in a sealed envelope with the title of this Request and the Respondent's name, address and telephone number clearly marked on the outside.
Any SOQ that is delivered after the times stated in this Request shall be deemed ineligible. All questions pertaining to this Request shall be in writing (email or carrier service) to Chelsea Boulrisse, Project Manager, Grow Wabash County at chelsea@growwabashcounty.com or by calling (260) 563-5258.
Mailing Address:
Grow Wabash County
214 S. Wabash St.
Wabash, IN 46992

SOQ Minimum Criteria:
Each firm's SOQ shall be no more than t wenty (20) single-sided pages (10 pages double-sided) and shall include, at minimum, the following:
- Name, address, and brief description of firm.
- Resumes of key personnel to be assigned to this project
- Narrative as to the firm's interest, particular abilities, and qualifications related to this project
- Description of related projects designed by your firm and key personnel pertinent to that project
- Examples of knowledge, expertise, and/or experience with similar projects
- Sample training program to help small businesses develop e-commerce strategy outlined, estimate number of businesses served, and schedule; project must conclude by Dec 31, 2022.
- Project Budget – project not to exceed $50,000 for fees, training materials, software needs, and marketing

Selection Criteria
Consultants will be scored on the following criteria:
- Quality of firm's Statement of Qualifications in relationship to information requested
- Apparent knowledge of the project and specific needs
- Capacity of team to do work including Project Manager ability
- Consultants experience in projects similar in size and nature to the ones in this RFQ
- Firm's familiarity with local conditions, requirements, and needs
- Analysis of the firm's overall approach to your project, including the feasibility of the program's completion by Dec. 31, 2022.

Selection Procedure:
Consultants shall be selected for work items further described herein, based on the evaluation of the SOQ's and any other required documents. The Statement of Qualifications Evaluation form shall be used to determine a priority ranking list.
The SOQ's shall be scored by a three (3) to five (5) member selection committee that will rank each consultant using the Statement of Qualifications Form as described above. From the score sheets, the scoring committee will determine the top most qualified firm. That firm will then be notified of their selection.
The selection procedure will be used as a guide and the final decision will be at the sole discretion of Grow Wabash County. Grow Wabash County reserves the right to interview consultants before making the final decision.

Contract Conditions:
The selection process will provide a ranking for all submissions from most qualified to least qualified. The County will then enter into negotiations with the firm determined to be the most qualified. If successful negotiations cannot be achieved, Grow Wabash County reserves the right to terminate negotiations and initiate negotiations with the next ranked firm until an agreement can be achieved with one of the firms.
The prospective consultant is advised that should this process result in a recommendation for award of an agreement, the agreement will not be in force until it is approved and fully executed Grow Wabash County and Region 3A. All documents and materials related to this process, unless otherwise exempt, will be subject to Indiana's Public Access Law.
Upon successful negation of an agreement, the firm selected will be asked to provide, among other things, a Certificate of Insurance in accordance with the requirements which follow along with appropriate documentation evidencing its compliance with the Federal Government's E-Verify Program which also follow.

Insurance:
The Consultant shall not commence work until it has obtained all the insurance required as follows and such insurance has been approved by Grow Wabash County.
1) Policies and Coverage.
i) The Consultant shall obtain and maintain for the term of the Contract the following policies and coverage:
(a) C omprehensive or Commercial Form General Liability Insurance, on an occurrence basis, covering work done or to be done by or on behalf of the Consultant and providing insurance for bodily injury, personal injury, property damage, and contractual liability. The aggregate limit shall apply separately to the work. Coverage shall include premises-operation, product completed operations; include coverage for explosion, collapse and underground work.
(b) B usiness Automobile Liability Insurance, on occurrence basis, covering owned, hired, and non-owned automobiles used by or on behalf of the Contractor and providing insurance for bodily injury, property damage, and contractual liability, Such insurances shall include coverage for uninsured and underinsured motorists.
(c) W orker's Compensation including Employers Liability Insurance, as required by law.
(d) O ther Insurance, by agreement between the Grow Wabash County and the Contractor.

ii) The Consultant's obligations to obtain and maintain all required insurance are non-delegable duties under this Contract.

Employment Eligibility Verification (E-Verify):
The Consultant shall affirm under the penalties of perjury that he/she/it does not knowingly employ an unauthorized alien. The Consultant shall enroll in and verify the work eligibility status of all his/her/its newly hired employees through the E-Verify program as defined in IC 22-5-1.7-3. The Consultant is not required to participate should the E-Verify program cease to exist. Additionally, the Consultant is not required to participate if the Consultant is self-employed and does not employ any employees. The Consultant shall not knowingly employ or contract with an unauthorized alien. The Consultant shall not retain an employee or contract with a person that the Consultant subsequently learns is an unauthorized alien. The Consultant shall require his/her/its subcontractors, who perform work under this contract, to certify to the Consultant that the subcontractor does not knowingly employ or contract with an unauthorized alien and that the subcontractor has enrolled and is participating in the E-Verify program. The Consultant agrees to maintain this certification throughout the duration of the term of a contract with a subcontractor. Maid of honor doesn't say yes to the dress

Amy Dickinson
Ask Amy

DEAR AMY: Last year, I asked "Hannah" to be my maid of honor for my destination wedding.

She exuberantly accepted and we both started planning.

The wedding was only about five months away, so things needed to be figured out quickly. I gave Hannah no less than three different options of times to go dress shopping.She was always "unable to make it." She is single, with a car, and has no real reason to be unavailable.

After a couple months of this, I let Hannah know that I was really sorry, but another friend would be stepping in as maid of honor. I said I still very much wanted her as a bridesmaid.

Long story short: she completely freaked. She told me I was a terrible person, how dare I do this to her when she "spent so much time and effort on this already," that I obviously didn't care about our friendship, and she didn't want anything more to do with me!

Our young daughters (both 9 years old) were best friends.

I have tried to repair this friendship. It still bothers me that maybe I WAS in the wrong. I also want to help restore our daughters' friendship. She won't even let her daughter have play dates with us anymore.

Can I get your objective opinion? Was I so wrong in picking a different maid of honor? Or should I have just sucked it up and dealt with Hannah's problematic schedule? Should I continue to try to repair this? – Still Bothered

DEAR BOTHERED: You both blew it.

From your account, "Hannah" was helpful in exuberantly partnering with you to plan this wedding quickly.

Must a maid of honor accompany the bride to shop for dresses? No.

If Hannah had a specific reason for wanting to skip this task, she should have told you (rather than dodging), but rather than demoting her, you could have simply told her that due to your own schedule, you were going to try to get another person to go dress shopping with you. So yes, you should have sucked it up.

Your choice to judge her for having "no real reason to be unavailable" is unfortunate.

No MOH who has already committed to the role will value being demoted.

You slighted her, and Hannah has overreacted. Taking this feud to the next generation is unkind.

DEAR AMY: We believe our daughter's partner has a drinking problem. When he's around alcohol, he occasionally overindulges.

The most recent occurrence happened when my wife and I were away from home for the evening, and they were at our home. When we left the house, I had a six pack of beer and a bottle of rum, both of which were gone when we returned at the end of the evening.

We have a history of witnessing bad behavior from our daughter's various partners. We don't want to completely lose our relationship with our daughter and grandchildren, so I'm at a loss of how to bring this up without seeming to attack her judgment and further alienate her from us.

We could simply hide the alcohol, but do you think we should discuss this with him alone or with them as a couple? – History of Miscommunications

DEAR HISTORY: You don't actually know who consumed all of this alcohol. (Your daughter might have done her part.)

You might want to contact both your daughter and her partner and say, "After you were at our house the other night, we noticed a six-pack of beer and a bottle of rum were gone. Did you guys have a party and not invite us?"

Generally, you should assume that any family members staying in your home will help themselves to consumables – unless you've expressly asked them not to.

In the future, put anything you don't want consumed – whether it is alcohol, leftovers, or Mint Milano cookies – out of reach (in an extreme case, you could use a cooler in the trunk of your car).

DEAR AMY: This is for "Constantly Tuned In," who keeps the TV on all night – but then the TV awakens her.

Here's how I cured my insomnia: I listen to a very long audio book over and over. It helps me fall asleep, but I know the story, so it doesn't keep me awake.

Unlike a TV or radio, an audio book has no sudden alterations in sound to awaken me.

I have been listening to something all night for over 40 years. – Sleeping in Culver City

DEAR SLEEPING: I love your solution.

HOROSCOPE

SATURDAY, JULY 30, 2022

ARIES (March 21-April 19) This may be a good time to start a project you've been planning. Remain philosophical about minor misunderstandings or circumstances that test you. Anything that is in your best interests should run smoothly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) If you make an effort to get along, you can go a long way. You may offer some extra acceptance and forgiveness to soothe someone's ruffled feathers. When you're always truthful, you need never fear exposure.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may begin to believe in angelic guidance – keep your eyes open for miracles this weekend. If you need assistance, just ask and help should arrive. Good advice may come from a book or from a close friend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) A few crossed signals could make you or a loved one uncomfortable for a few hours. You are probably wiser than usual where handling finances is concerned, so put a new business plan or investment into motion.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Make an effort to meet someone halfway. Achieve a compromise and the results should prove that a united front is unbeatable. This is an excellent time to make amends to someone if you have done harm in the past.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It is unlikely that your silence will be mistaken for ignorance or that your kindness will be seen as weakness. Sometimes helpful actions performed without saying a word are the ones that will be the most appreciated.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Focus on the future by having faith in facts, not fictions. A social blunder could end up being unimportant and forgettable. A partner could be filled with optimism about your joint plans and offer sound guidance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) A closed door might lead you to a better opportunity. Just because a loved one seems unpredictable doesn't mean that you are headed for a breakup. Look for an opening to improve your future and make better choices.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Exercise your generosity and help someone in need. Your compassion may be contagious and can encourage other people to give to others. Your instincts could be right on target for making new friends out of business acquaintances.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) It could be a great time to mend fences and make amends. If something has been nagging at your conscience, this is a good time to clear the air. You might find that offerings from the heart can bring unanticipated benefits.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Believe in your partner and if needed, build up your confidence to firmly believe in yourself. Team up with someone who is willing to share an abundance of knowledge. Together, you can enjoy the rewards of a good life.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) If you hit the jackpot, cash in your chips. Taking a calculated risk could pay off. You can sign agreements and contracts knowing that promises made will likely be promises kept. Believe that you deserve the best.

Summer Chicken with Sauce Aurore (Tomato Mayonnaise Sauce).

Celebrate tomato season with tasty summer chicken recipe

By LINDA GASSENHEIMER
Tribune News Service (TNS)

Ripe tomatoes are in season. Here's an easy way to use them. To keep their fresh flavor, the tomatoes are not cooked. Their juice and seeds are blended into a sauce and mixed with mayonnaise. The remaining tomato pulp is cut into cubes and added to the sauce.

Boneless, skinless chicken thighs are used for the recipe. I like to flatten them so that the thick and thinner sections cook evenly.

Summer Chicken with Sauce Aurore (Tomato Mayonnaise Sauce)

3/4 pound boneless skinless chicken thighs
Olive oil spray
1 large tomato
1/4 cup reduced-fat mayonnaise
Salt and freshly ground black pepper

Flatten chicken thighs with a meat mallet or bottom of a heavy skillet to about 1/4-inch thick. Heat a nonstick skillet over medium-high heat. Spray with olive oil spray and add chicken. Saute 2 minutes. Turn and saute 3 to 4 minutes or until a meat thermometer reaches 165 degrees Fahrenheit. While chicken sautees, cut tomato in half and scoop out the seeds and tomato liquid into a food processor or press through a sieve. Process until smooth. There should be about 1/2 cup of tomato puree. Mix tomato puree with the mayonnaise. Cut the remaining tomato flesh into cubes. Divide the cooked chicken between 2 dinner plates. Sprinkle with salt and pepper to taste. Spoon the sauce over the chicken and add the tomato cubes on top.

Cucumber Rice Salad

1 package microwave brown rice to make 1 1/2 cups cooked rice
4 tablespoons reduced-fat oil and vinegar dressing
Salt and freshly ground black pepper
1 cup cucumber cubes, cut into 1/4- to 1/2-inch pieces
1/4 cup fresh basil leaves, torn into small pieces

Microwave rice according to the package instructions. Measure 1 1/2 cups and save any remaining rice for another meal. Place rice in a bowl and add the dressing and salt and pepper to taste. Toss to coat the rice with the dressing. Add the cucumbers and basil leaves and mix into the salad.

Homemade coffee ice cream and hot fudge sundaes

By GRETCHEN McKAY
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette (TNS)

Ice cream is the best of desserts any time of year, but it really hits the spot on a warm and balmy summer evening.

Cool and creamy, it's both decadent and nostalgic, whether it's piled high on an ice cream cone or – my favorite way – scooped into a crispy waffle bowl and drenched with spoonful after spoonful of homemade hot fudge.

When I was a kid, my siblings and I spent many nights churning ice cream in a hand-cranked ice cream maker. (Whew – but, eventually, so worth it!) Today's plug-in versions are much easier on the hands and shoulders, with an electric motor doing all the grunt work by rotating the metal canister that holds the ice cream base in a slurry of ice and salt. If you keep the canister at the ready in the freezer, and have heavy cream and eggs in the refrigerator, you can have fresh ice cream in less than an hour in any flavor your heart desires. It's that easy.

This sundae recipe features what I swear is one of the best chocolate fudge sauces I've ever tasted – that of Pittsburgh food blogger Michelle Lettrich, who runs the popular site Brown Eyed Baker. It's so delicious, you might want to hide any leftovers under your bed, like my little sister, Posie, used to do with the Cool Whip. (Just kidding – you should hide it in the back of the fridge.)

I made the sundaes with coffee ice cream because that's what I love best, but you could easily substitute vanilla, cinnamon, strawberry or whatever flavor of ice cream rocks your world.

The sauce can be stored in a covered container in the fridge for up to 2 weeks. To reheat, microwave for 30 seconds to 1 minute until it's pourable but still thick.

Homemade Coffee Fudge Sundaes

For ice cream
2 cups half and half
1 cup sugar
Pinch of salt
4 egg yolks
1 cup heavy cream
1 1/2 -2 tablespoons instant coffee or espresso powder
For hot fudge sauce
2/3 cup heavy or whipping cream
1/2 cup light corn syrup or honey
1/4 cup dark brown sugar
1/4 cup cocoa powder
1/4 teaspoon fine or table salt
1 cup semi- or bittersweet chocolate chips, divided
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract
For sundaes
Whipped cream, for garnish
Maraschino cherries and crushed nuts, for garnish

Make ice cream: Warm half and half, sugar and salt in a medium saucepan over medium heat, whisking to dissolve sugar.

Beat egg yolks in a small mixing bowl, add 1/2 cup of the warm mixture to the egg yolks and whisk to combine. Then add that mixture to the half and half on the stovetop. Whisk in coffee granules until dissolved.

Cook over medium-low heat stirring constantly until the mixture thickens slightly – just barely sticking to the back of a spatula or until it reaches 170 degrees.

Place the heavy cream into a bowl with a fine mesh strainer on top of the bowl. Strain the custard into the heavy cream. Discard what is left on the strainer. Add vanilla extract, and stir to combine.

Transfer to an airtight container and cool completely in the fridge (preferably overnight).

Pour mixture into an ice cream maker and churn until frozen (about 30-40 minutes). Transfer to an airtight container and freeze completely, about 4 hours.

When ready to make sundaes, prepare hot fudge: In a 2-quart saucepan over medium-high heat, bring the cream, corn syrup, brown sugar, cocoa powder, salt and half of the chocolate chips to a boil. Reduce the heat to medium-low or low (enough to maintain a low simmer), and cook for 5 minutes, stirring occasionally.

Remove from the heat and stir in the remaining chocolate chips, butter and vanilla extract, stirring until smooth. Let cool for 20 to 30 minutes before using (it will thicken as it cools). Store in a jar or airtight container in the refrigerator for up to 2 weeks. To reheat, microwave for 30 seconds to 1 minute until it's pourable but still thick.

Assemble sundaes: Place 3 scoops of ice cream in a sundae cup or bowl. Spoon hot fudge on top, and garnish with whipped cream and a maraschino cherry. Crushed nuts are optional. Serve immediately.

Makes enough ice cream for at least 8 sundaes.

Mussels in Garlic Tomato Broth

By LINDA GASSENHEIMER
Tribune News Service (TNS)

Mussels steamed in a garlic, tomato and white wine broth are easy and inexpensive to make. Store the mussels in the refrigerator. The commercially raised mussels available today are cleaner than they used to be. Just wash them in cold water before using. Scrape off the beard or thin hairs along the shell. If any mussels are open, tap them gently. Discard any that do not close.

Mussels In Garlic Tomato Broth

1 package microwave brown rice (to make 1 1/2 cups cooked rice)
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 1/2 cups sliced onion
2 large garlic cloves, crushed
1 cup sliced celery
4 plum tomatoes cut into large cubes (about 2 cups)
1/2 cup dry white wine
Freshly ground black pepper
3 pounds mussels
1/4 cup chopped parsley

Microwave brown rice according to package instructions. Divide 1 1/2 cups between two large soup bowls. Save remaining rice for another meal. Heat the oil in a large saucepan over medium heat. Saute the onion, garlic, celery and tomatoes until they start to shrivel but not color, about 5 to 6 minutes. Add the white wine and some freshly ground pepper and bring to a boil. Add the mussels and cover the saucepan tightly. Let boil about 3 minutes, shaking the pan several times. The wine will boil up over the mussels and they will open. As soon as they are open, take the pan off the heat. Do not overcook. The mussels will become rubbery.

To serve, lift the mussels out of the pan with a slotted spoon and place in the two large soup bowls over the rice. Discard any mussels that do not open. Spoon the broth over the mussels. Sprinkle with the parsley and serve. Makes 2 servings.

The FBI says it busted a big crypto Ponzi scam – it just got bigger

We are in an age where investors are duped into believing they can become millionaires by sinking their money into cryptocurrency-related companies or platforms.

Scammers are capitalizing on the crypto craze big time. Since the start of 2021, Americans have lost more than $1 billion to cryptocurrency scams, nearly 60 times the losses reported in 2018, according to the Federal Trade Commission.

Michelle Singletary

A company called EminiFX claimed it had developed a proprietary trading system that would invest people's money in cryptocurrency and the foreign exchange markets, also known as forex.

When the Justice Department and Commodity Futures Trading Commission filed complaints against a suspected Ponzi scheme by the company, they believed the swindle amounted to $59 million.

But that turned out to be a gross underestimate, according to a preliminary report filed by David Castleman, a partner at Raines Feldman in New York, who has been appointed receiver for EminiFX.

The Justice Department and Commodity Futures Trading Commission alleged that EminiFX, owned by Eddy Alexandre of New York, was a Ponzi-like scheme that promised participants guaranteed returns of at least 5 percent every single week.

Castleman said his investigation found that $250 million was collected from investors from September 2021 until May 2022 and that there were 62,000 EminiFX user accounts. Emil Bove, an attorney for Alexandre, did not respond to requests for comment. Alexandre entered a plea of not guilty, according to the Justice Department.

Based on Castleman's forensic look at EminiFX, the sophistication of the platform and its production of what appear to be phantom returns is astounding.

This is like no other case I've followed. Thousands of investors, many from Haiti, are standing behind Alexandre. Close to 14,000 EminiFX investors have already signed a change.org petition in support of the Haitian-born Alexandre, who many believe is a victim of racist prosecution.

"Together we will fight this," one petition signer wrote. "When will we get a break with this discrimination? I'm sure things would have been way different if we were from a different race." Another wrote, "The system is basically telling us (Black people) to stick to basketball, football and rap music if we ever want to get out of poverty."

Several investors I interviewed are convinced the profits they saw in their online accounts from Alexandre were real. "He gave it to you every week," said Markens Nicolas, who helped start the change.org petition. "So that makes it more believable."

Here is how the platform worked, according to the investigation. EminiFX users deposited cash or cryptocurrency into the system. There was a multilevel marketing aspect of the platform where people could earn bonuses for recruiting others. Account balances were shown in U.S. dollars. Investors maintained funds in their "e-wallets" used for deposits or "trading wallets."

"Every Friday, a weekly "ROI" or return on investment of between 5 percent and 9.99 percent was applied to every EminiFX user's account balance, the same ROI for all users," the report said.

Information from the EminiFX system showed positive returns every week, from a low of 5.01 percent to a high of 9.99 percent. "I haven't found any investing activity to support those returns," Castleman said in an interview.

An investor who deposited $10,000 in cash on Oct. 15, and elected to reinvest the supposed returns into a trading wallet, would have seen an account balance of over $77,000 by the time the company was shut down in May 2022, Castleman's report indicated. That would have been an extraordinary and highly improbable return in such a short time frame.

Castleman's investigation found more than 22,000 withdrawal transactions from the EminiFX platform totaling nearly $35 million between November 2021 and May 2022. However, much more money was flowing into the operation. If the company took in more than $250 million, this could explain how investors never realized their gains weren't real.

"Many users appear to never have withdrawn or redeemed funds," according to Castleman's report to the court. Generally, a Ponzi scheme involves people being paid not from investment returns but from money collected from other investors.

After investigating all possible investing activities, Castleman said he couldn't trace how the weekly returns that were applied to EminiFX user accounts were generated. He was unable to locate any evidence for the existence of the proprietary trading system referred to as a Robo Assisted Adviser Account, or RA3, in any EminiFX file or anywhere in the code base.

The report said that none of the former employees understood how the weekly return on investments was earned, what the RA3 was, or how it worked. By the time Castleman took over the platform, the total balances of all the trading wallets were reportedly about $512 million.

But he could only find assets worth about $170 million. Included in that total are more than 3,650 bitcoins located in an Estonia cryptocurrency exchange valued at more than $85 million based on the July 20 trading price.

However, bitcoin's price volatility from November 2021 to May 2022 could not have resulted in the consistently positive weekly returns that were being applied to the EminiFX user accounts. The price of bitcoin was falling sharply amid a sell-off in the stock market.

There was some trading going on, but it was in Alexandre's personal brokerage account. The records show Alexandre invested $9 million, "almost exclusively in funds that are clearly traceable to EminiFX corporate accounts," Castleman reported. And even then, Alexandre's personal trading resulted in over $7 million in losses – not the healthy profits he kept claiming – by the time a receiver was appointed.

The receiver has shut down the EminiFX website and operations and has been searching for any and all assets. A dedicated website, eminifxreceivership.com, which is in English and French, has been set up to keep investors informed and eventually set up a claims process.

Although Alexandre has yet to go to trial, for the tens of thousands of people who put their faith in him, the hope of becoming wealthy by investing with EminiFX is not going to happen.

"Most of the investors are worried that their money is being held by a receivership they do not trust," Nicolas said.

Now that's rich.

Most of us are afraid of the unknown; we do not know what lies ahead and we worry about being able to cope with it. We yearn for stability in an ever-changing world. Whatever tomorrow brings, we can have the peaceful conviction that God's love for us is unchanging and everlasting. Worship this week and discover a steadfast security and a sustaining faith. No matter what the future holds, God will take care of us.
